The Inauguration of Dr. Fox

Stories by Dawn Medley

In a colorful ceremony at First Presbyterian Church in Staunton, Pamela Fox was inaugurated on April 2 as the ninth president of Mary Baldwin College.

Among those looking on as Fox took the oath of office from Claire Lewis Arnold, chairwoman of the Board of Trustees, was Fox's husband, Dan Layman, former senior development officer at Miami, and her parents.

In her acceptance speech before some 700 invited guests, including about 90 delegates from colleges and universities around the country, Fox said she wants Mary Baldwin to be "nationally recognized as a leader in providing personalized, transforming liberal education" that features "signature programs" and a deep sense of community. She said the college wants to build on its reputation for distinctive programs that include one for gifted young women who skip high school, the only all-female cadet corps in the country, and master's level studies in Shakespeare in partnership with Shenandoah Shakespeare and its Blackfriars Playhouse, the only authentic re-creation of Shakespeare's indoor theater.

Concert Wows Audience

Captivated from the first jingle of tiny bells tied around dancers' ankles as they entered up the aisles, the audience at "Hands Full of Beauty," a concert of world music, slipped into a far away culture for part of the afternoon April 2.

Srinivas Krishnan, artistic director of Global Rhythms, and other performers from around the world evoked the power of the human hand during the concert in celebration of President Pamela Fox's inauguration.

The concert began with a traditional Indian dance called Odissi performed by sisters Laboni, Shibani and Shalani Patnaik. The young women have performed the dance — which involves intricate hand and finger movements and bells tied to their ankles and wrists — while on tours with Madonna and Ravi Shankar.

Krishnan said he envisioned the sisters, who are have all finished or are enrolled in American universities and who have high professional ambitions, as role models for students in the audience.

A pianist, saxophonist and several hand percussionists — many of whom are graduates or students from Miami University's School of Fine Arts — performed a hypnotic chant and instrumental piece. Drum solos by Krishnan, Patrick Hernly, Satish Pathakota, and young percussion prodigy Kiran Pathakota, a master of the a two-headed drum called the mridangam, rolled the performance to a heart-pumping crescendo.

The percussionists rapidly alternated solos on various ethnic drums: the ghatam, a clay pot from southern India; the kanjira, an instrument made from the skin of an iguana; the tabla, an instrument from northern India; and the steel pan, a Caribbean drum with a metallic sound.

Krishnan's association with Miami University, where Dr. Fox was a professor of music and dean of the School of Fine Arts, began when he was a student in the mid-1980s. He met Dr. Fox during that time and, later, she encouraged the development of Global Rhythms, which has grown from an ensemble of four people to more than 120 musicians and dancers from around the globe.

A Sonnet for Mary Baldwin College

By Sarah Kennedy

September, and the lady-slipper's back,
the Queen Anne's lace: Joanna's at her poems, Nakita's reading French. The foliage burns, and Sherry, under her midnight lamp, tracks

the histories of human population.
Evening windows, where the women gather
(the hour comes earlier and earlier), show ancient hills behind the young reflections.

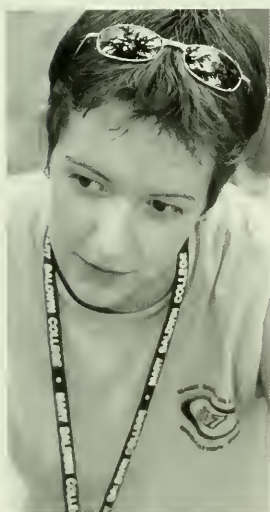

Then winter's gone, the Blue Ridge dark with dame's rocket, a flower once cultivated, now blossoming in woods and city yards. New robes are pressed. The wild azaleas flame.

Then May arrives and one more year's brought round to summer's brilliances in leaf and bloom.

Sarah Kennedy, assistant professor of English, is an award-winning poet.

The Fighting Squirrels earned MBC basketball's first trip to the NCAA Tournament with a conference championship win February 28. The Squirrels beat Hood College, the top ranked team in the Atlantic Women's Colleges Conference.

"The game was everything a championship should be," MBC basketball coach Jackie Bryan said about the contest with Hood. The score was tied 76-76 with 20 seconds left in the game. MBC senior Lynn Malone was fouled on a drive to the basket and sank one of two free throws to put MBC up 77-76. Hood called a timeout with 17.7 seconds left to draw up a play, but the Fighting Squirrels denied the Blazers a basket and held on for the win.

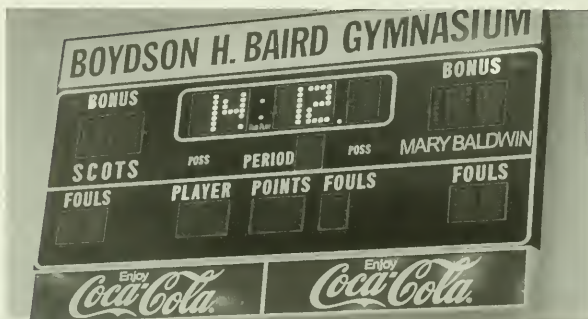

Unfortunately, the team was eliminated from the national competition in a 101-51 loss Wednesday to Tennessee's Maryville College Lady Scots. Maryville has made five consecutive appearances in the NCAA tournament. Wednesday night, the squad succumbed to the pressures of being on the road — and competing in the biggest game of their college careers. Senior Lynn Malone led team scoring with 11 points and fellow senior Lateasha Armstead added nine points and 10 rebounds, but the team shot just 26 percent from the floor.

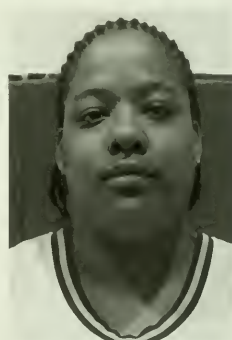

"Despite the loss, it was a great experience," Bryan said. "It was exciting just to see our team's name printed on the NCAA posters on the walls and find our roster in the media guide that is distributed nationwide." Bryan said the team was honored to represent the AWCC and Mary Baldwin as one of the top 50 of 370 Division III women's teams. Mary Baldwin ended the season ranked second in the conference with an 11-3 record and 19-9 overall.

The Fighting Squirrels softball team made its debut in the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament May 7, after a conference championship win against Hood College.

The softball team's trip to the Division III playoffs marked Mary Baldwin's second appearance in the national sports arena this year; the college had never before sent a team to an NCAA tournament. This winter, the Mary Baldwin basketball team won its first AWCC championship to advance to the tournament.

Just four years after entering the Atlantic Women's Colleges Conference in varsity softball, the Fighting Squirrels traveled to Salisbury, Maryland, for the East Regional games. Unfortunately, Mary Baldwin — seeded sixth — lost its first game to Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, at Camden, the No. 3 seed. The team was eliminated from the tournament after a second loss to Cabrini College, of Radnor, Pennsylvania.

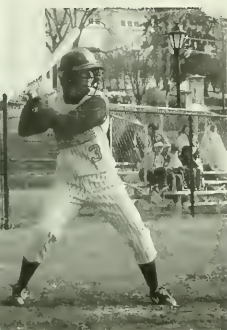

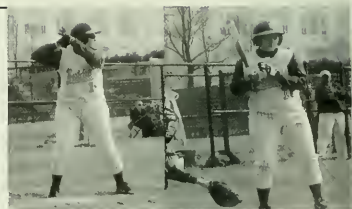

"After a few nervous and jittery innings, we held both teams off for a long time," said head softball coach Christy Shelton '87. "Our players know now that we can play at that level and my goal is to return and improve next year."

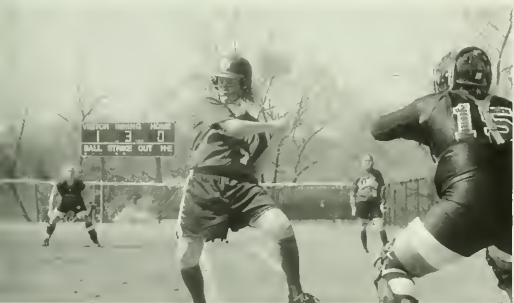

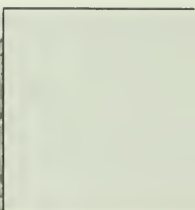

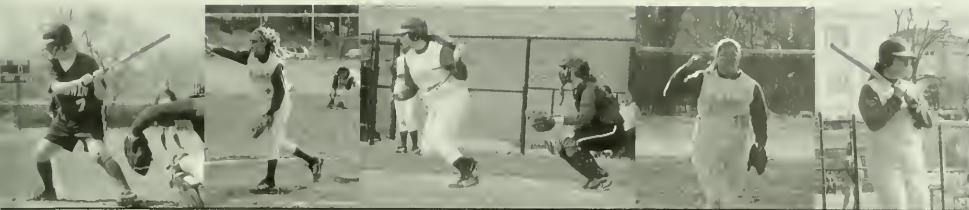

Mary Baldwin, seeded first in the AWCC tournament, beat Chatham College and Chestnut Hill College to meet the Blazers of Hood College in the title game. The scenario was familiar to returning Fighting Squirrels players — MBC met Hood in the championship last year and lost.

This time, Mary Baldwin won the first game 9-8 in the best-two-out-of-three series, but fell behind 4-2 in the seventh inning of the second game. Hits by Tiffany Morris '06 and Jessica Brown '07 rallied the Squirrels to within one run. A two-run homer by team captain Jordan Armstrong '04 cleared the fence and earned the 5-4 victory.

Armstrong is the team's only senior and the only player who has been a member since the inaugural 2000 season.

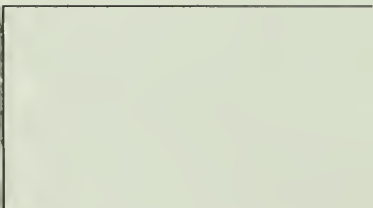

"They didn't quit," said MBC head coach Christy Shelton '87. "They put together the best five games they've played all year." The Squirrels' finished the season 21-19.

College Relay for Life Raises More Than $14,000

By Dawn Medley

The American Cancer Society Relay for Life on campus March 26–27 raised nearly $14,500, exceeding the college's ambitious efforts during its first year in the program, last year, by close to $2,000. Spearheaded by students and staff the event collected money for cancer research through donations, related fundraisers, and pledges for laps by 13 teams around MBC's Physical Activities Center track.

The event has grown in popularity and scope. Students in every class as well as alumnae/i, staff, faculty, friends, family and community members took part this year. Close to 175 participants transformed the track into a temporary campsite, stage and conversation area for the 12-hour overnight walk-a-thon.

The presence of cancer survivors — many of whom share their stories — is an integral part of the fundraiser. MBC students, staff members, and alumnae who have beaten or are living with cancer joined in the Survivor's Walk at the start of the event. Christina Samuel '07, Elizabeth May '06, Vice President of Business and Finance Jane Pietrowski Executive Director of Alumnae/i Activities Lynn Gilliland '80, and alumna Judy Armstrong '58 were some of the participants in the walk.

"We talk a lot about how cancer affects everyone, but I never thought it would be me," said Gilliland, who was diagnosed this year. "I came to the relay feeling kind of tired and down, and I left feeling supported and uplifted. It gave me very powerful sense of the family I have on this campus."

The keynote address was given by John Kibler, Mary Baldwin professor of psychology. He spoke emotionally about his young daughter's long struggle with cancer and the things she has taught him during her illness.

MBC President Pamela Fox and Staunton Vice Mayor Dick Robinson also participated in the opening ceremony.

For weeks before the relay, the committee solicited area businesses, resulting in donations of food, door prizes, silent auction items, and raffle gifts, including framed prints by local artists P. Buckley Moss, Mary Ann Vessey, and Lisa Geiman.

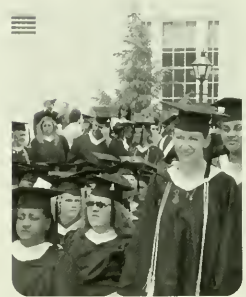

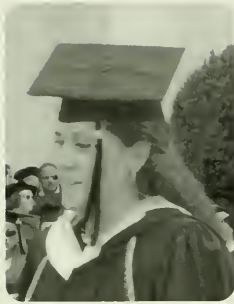

As of closing ceremony time at the relay, junior Victoria TenBroeck was the top individual fundraiser with more than $1,500 in donations. The top fundraising team was Fishing for a Cure, which raised close to $4,200, and the team Buggin' Cancer won recognition for the best team campsite.

The Mary Baldwin gathering was one of more than 3,000 Relay for Life events held in communities around the country. Last year, relays — signature events for the American Cancer Society — raised $212 million nationwide.
